Reagan orders 55 Soviet reps to leave U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration Tuesday ordered 55 Soviet diplomats to leave the country within nine days, but said it hoped the action would not sour the prospects for arms control.

Five of the diplomats were declared "persona non grata" in retaliation for the earlier expulsion of five U.S. diplomats from Moscow. The additional 50 were ordered out to bring the Soviet embassy staff in Washington and consulate staff in San Francisco "to parity" with the size of the U.S. contingent in Moscow and Leningrad.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman announced the retaliation with "regrets," but said it was forced on the administration by the Soviet Union.

Redman also sought to assure Moscow that the United States did not want to lose the momentum achieved at President Reagan's summit meeting in Iceland with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"We remain committed to pursuing the dialogue stemming from the Reykjavik meeting in all areas of our relationship," he said. "This problem of espionage is an important one, but it is a separate problem, and our plan is to go ahead with the dialogue."

THE ADMINISTRATION is preparing new arms control proposals, based on the summit meeting, to present to the Soviets in negotiations in Geneva. Also, Secretary of State George Shultz is due to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Vienna on Nov. 6.

Under the new ceiling, required by Congress last year, the Soviets will be permitted to have no more than 225 people at their embassy in Washington and no more than 26 at the consulate in San Francisco.

The five Soviets declared "persona non grata" were identified as counselors Vasily Fedotov, Oleg Likhachev and Aleksandr Metelkin and attache Nikolay Kokovin, all at the embassy in Washington, and Lev Zaytsev, consul in San Francisco.

This matches the expulsion of the five Americans from Moscow for what the Soviets Sunday called "impermissible activities."

Redman said the five Soviets were singled out because "they are persons we have reason to believe have engaged in activities inconsistent with their diplomatic status."

This appeared to be an allegation that they were involved in espionage activities, but Redman did not make the charge directly. However, he stressed their expulsion was caused by "the unjustified action by the Soviets in expelling five U.S. diplomats in Moscow."

In Moscow, Gennady Gerasimov, a spokesman for the Soviet Foreign Ministry, said "if the United States will insist on continuing this game of tit-for-tat, then this can continue indefinitely. We consider it is time to stop."

Director search stalled

by Beth Thomas
staff reporter

Faculty Senate passed a resolution yesterday requesting that the current search for an Affirmative Action director be suspended, a new search committee be appointed to find a director, and an acting director be appointed to fill the position until a replacement is named.

The resolution followed an hour-long debate on whether the current search committee, which has recommended two finalists for the position, represented a broad enough range of minority interests, particularly women and black faculty members.

Phil Mason, executive assistant to University President Paul Olscamp, said he doesn't know if the administration will act on the resolution.

"That's a decision only the president (Olscamp) can make," he said.

The resolution followed a vote by Senate to waive its requirement that all motions be presented to the Senate Executive Committee before being placed on the Senate's agenda.

Mason said concerned people should ask questions, receive input and give their comments about the two candidates for affirmative action director at the "open forum" meetings scheduled next week.

CANDIDATE JOANNE Gall will speak Oct. 28 from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. and candidate James Wadley will speak Oct. 30 from 10:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m.

In other action, Senate voted to recommend the addition of an eight-week session to next summer's schedule to run from May 18 to July 10.

It had previously approved 4 five-week sessions, running May 18-June 19, June 8-July 10, June 22-July 24, and July 13-Aug. 14, and an eight-week session running June 22-Aug. 14.

Ramona Cormier, dean of continuing education, said each session serves a special need.

She said the June 22-Aug. 14 term would be for summer freshmen, the May 18-June 19 and the June 22-July 24 five-week sessions are designed for the College of Business Administration. The June 8-July 10 and July 13-Aug. 14 five-week sessions are for the College of Education and Allied Professions, whose students are primarily teachers, not able to attend sessions during the school year.

DENISE TRAUTH, chair of the Radio-Television-Film department, said many faculty members feel five weeks is not enough time to teach an entire semester's course.

Distributor discounts 21 law

Editor's note: This is the second of a series of articles concerning Alcohol Awareness Week.

by John Meola
staff reporter

A Bowling Green beer distributor does not expect the drinking age to rise to 21 this school year.

Norm Heineman, president of Bowling Green Beverage, Inc., has been following the progress of the drinking age legislation. He said that it would not be raised before election day and that the issue would not go into hearing until January.

He said this at a panel discussion yesterday sponsored by the Alcohol Awareness Committee.

He blames so-called "dry forces" for wanting to raise the drinking age to 21. These dry forces, Heineman said, are organizations that want to eliminate liquor. "These people realize that the federal government is the only way to get a national drinking age. It is too difficult for them to work at the state level," he said.

Heineman also believes that the state will include a "grandfather clause" that will allow people who are able to drink now, but wouldn't be able to if the drinking age were raised, continue to do so should a "21" law be passed.

IF THE LAW is passed, Heineman said he would like to see the law take effect in early August since there will be no students at the University and bars can plan what they will do to attract under-age customers.

Kelly McCoy, president of Undergraduate Student Government, said that the task for USG will be to provide ideas for activities in which the students can participate. An example of this is the "Dry Dock," a non-alcoholic bar which operates in the Mid-Am Room in Harshman Quadrangle. USG supports the Dry Dock by giving the bar funds to operate.

Other USG ideas include dorm parties, Christmas and Halloween parties and other non-alcoholic functions.

A major problem facing USG and the city police is off-campus keg parties. All three speakers agreed that keg parties will become an even bigger problem. Heineman expects to see business increase when the drinking age goes up.

For Heineman, who does business with carry-out establishments and sells only kegs, an increase in keg parties will mean an increase in business for Bowling Green Beverage.

The penalties for serving alcohol to someone under the legal drinking age are severe. Grant Tansel, a crime-prevention officer with Bowling Green city police, said a person caught serving someone under age can receive a maximum of six months in prison and a $1,000 fine.

TANSEL SAID that money is better spent on alcohol awareness programs instead of on enforcement of the drinking age. He said alcohol awareness should be stressed.

Writer kidnapped

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - An underground group said Tuesday it had kidnapped an American writer of children's books, claiming the long-time resident of Beirut was a spy for the United States and Israel.

A handwritten statement in Arabic purportedly from the Revolutionary Justice Organization said it had abducted Edward Austin Tracy, 55, of Rutland Vt., one of a few Americans who stayed in Moslem west Beirut despite the kidnapping of 60 foreigners there since January 1984.

Seven Americans are among the 20 kidnapped foreigners who still are missing in Lebanon. The Revolutionary Justice Organization, which is believed made up of Shiite Moslems loyal to Iran, earlier claimed to have kidnapped another of the seven Americans and three Frenchmen.

Tuesday's brief statement was delivered to a Western news agency in west Beirut. It did not say where or when Tracy was kidnapped.

State-run Beirut radio quoted police sources it did not identify as saying he disappeared Friday.

Accompanying the Revolutionary Justice statement was a color photograph of Tracy showing him from the waist up with a rough beard and wearing a blue shirt. He stared dully at the camera.

A PHOTOCOPY of the first page of his American passport, also sent with the statement, gave his birth date as Nov. 20, 1930.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said he could not confirm Tracy had been abducted, but added: "There is a guy by the name of Edward Tracy from Rutland, Vt., who was born in 1930. Our latest information is that he has lived in west Beirut lately, but we haven't heard of him lately."

"This guy hasn't had any contact with the embassy in recent months," he said by telephone from the U.S. mission in Christian east Beirut. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Freshman numbers down

by Julie Fauble

The University is trying to hold down the number of incoming students to bring enrollment under the state-mandated ceiling of 15,000 full-time equivalent students.

At the same time, it is working to increase the number of graduate students. The University's Role and Mission Statement stresses the enhancement of the graduate program, said Richard Eakin, vice-president of planning and budgeting.

Freshman enrollment is down from 3,280 to just under 3,000, but graduate enrollment went up from 1,983 to 2,037.

The number of full-time equivalent students is down from 15,637 to 15,612. The actual number of students enrolled this semester is up from 17,151 to 17,240.

A full-time equivalent student is a fictional daytime student on the main campus taking 15 course hours, Eakin said. A student taking six hours and a student taking nine hours combine to make one full-time equivalent student.

The University is trying to gradually reduce the number of students to the ceiling level because a rapid decrease would result in very unequal class sizes, Eakin said.

"We don't want to wreak havoc with the enrollment pattern of the University," he said.

THE CEILING has been in effect since 1971, but the University has only been under that ceiling about four times, Eakin said. In 1982, the University was almost 1,400 students above the ceiling.

The number of full-time equivalent students did not go down as far as University officials expected even though the University did control numbers of incoming students, Eakin said.

"We were predicting that we would go down about 300 or so," he said.

He said he did not know the reason for larger enrollment figures, but believes that it may reflect higher retention of continuing students. For example, he said, there are 3,210 seniors, about 100 more than expected.

Eakin said next year's freshman class tentatively will be about 2,900, and eventually, the freshman class may average about 2,950.

The gradual increase in the number of graduate students will not exactly balance the drop in the number of undergraduates because graduate students usually average about 10 hours of courses, while undergraduates usually average about 15, Eakin said. When counting the number of full-time equivalent students, three graduate students will be about equal to two undergraduates.

Tit for tat politics

In the on-going struggle for superpower supremacy, the prospect of peaceful coexistence is all the less likely when the United States and Soviet Union choose to play child-like mind games with each other.

Following the arrest of Gennadiy Zakharov in New York last month on spy charges the KGB responded by nabbing U.S. News and World Report correspondent Nicholas Daniloff and accusing him of espionage.

Shortly after the U.S. was able to retrieve Daniloff, in exchange for Zakharov's release, for which the Soviets also agreed to release dissident Yuri Orlov, the two nations, hoping for some kind of arms reduction accord, reached a stalemate in Reykjavik.

President Reagan was unwilling to give up the Strategic Defense Initiative, his ace-in-the-hole, and Mikhail Gorbachev would accept nothing less.

The usual accusations and counter-accusations between the White House and the Kremlin ensued, each foisting the blame for the summit's failure on the other. Then the Soviets, still miffed by the expulsion of their 25 U.N. representatives, countered by booting five U.S. diplomats out of Moscow on spy charges.

The Tom and Jerry politics continued with the White House announcing yesterday 55 Russian diplomats would be expelled from the Soviet embassy in Washington and Soviet consulate in San Francisco. Five were accused of being intelligence agents. Just for good measure, the Reagan administration announced that 70 more Soviets would be expelled in the next year and a half.

The administration cited the need to achieve 'parity' with the Soviets in terms of the number of representatives in each country. The White House also expressed the hope that these moves wouldn't impede any further arms reductions negotiations.

How can the two superpowers negotiate when each insists, as part of a grand, insane game of slam and counterslam, on calling the other side's diplomats spies and sending them packing?

Cub rule to doom Sox?

by Mike Royko

If you have not yet placed a bet on the World Series, a word of caution: Remember the Cub Factor.

The Cub Factor was discovered several years ago by a Chicago writer named Ron Berler.

By wading through decades of baseball records, Berler found a simple but amazing truth: It is almost impossible for a team to win the World Series if they have three or more ex-Cubs on the roster.

Since 1946, one dozen teams have gone into the World Series with three or more ex-Cubs on the roster. Some of them were powerhouses, overwhelming favorites.

But only one of these 12 teams was able to win the series.

We've seen the Cub Factor at work in recent years. In 1984, when the hated Padres beat out the Cubs, the laugh turned out to be on them. They had three ex-Cubs, the fools, while the Tigers had only one and, of course, the Tigers won.

The year before it was the same story. The Phillies had three ex-Cubs. The winning Orioles had prudently kept their roster free of Cubs.

It is Berler's theory that having been a Cub infects a player with something called "Cubness," which seems to spread to other members of their new team.

As Jim Brosnan, a former Cub pitcher once said, "You have to have a certain dullness of mind and spirit to play here. I went through psychoanalysis and that helped me deal with my Cubness."

What, you ask, does the Cub factor have to do with this World Series, since neither team has three ex-Cubs?

Because there is recent evidence, I believe, of something we might call the Modified Cub Factor.

It isn't as concrete a theorem as Berler's, but I think it has some validity.

The Modified Cub Factor goes something like this: "A team with no ex-Cubs probably has the edge on a team that has even one."

Consider last year's World Series. The sports experts, the bookies, and just about everybody else said the speedy, flashy Cardinals would beat the drab Royals.

They overlooked the fact that the Royals, who eventually won, had no ex-Cubs while the Cardinals were cursed with two.

We also should note that the Royals weren't expected to beat the powerful Toronto team in their playoff. But Toronto had Cubness, too.

Or take this year's playoffs. You might think the Mets beat the Astros because it is the better team.

Possibly. But the Astros did have two ex-Cubs, while the Mets are untainted by Cubness.

In the American League, both the Red Sox and Angels had one ex-Cub, which made it a toss-up. This might even explain why their series went to seven games. The way the two teams kicked the ball around at times, you could almost see the Cubness at work.

So how will the Modified Cub Factor, if there is such a force, affect the World Series?

Bad news for Red Sox fans and New York-haters. As I said, the Mets are free of former Cubs, but the Red Sox have one in Bill Buckner.

When I mentioned this to a fellow Cub fan, he cursed me and said, "The Cub Factor was bad enough. We don't need your hare-brained Modified Cub Factor. I wish people would stop talking about it."

Are you against the search for knowledge? The quest for knowledge is what separates man from the monkey. That plus the use of underwear.

He said: "I am against spreading such ideas around because it could make it impossible for the Cubs to find someone gullible enough to swap us a good ballplayer for one who runs the 40-yard dash in 10 seconds."

That's one way to look at it. Yet, I can't help feeling some pride in knowing that the Cubs might be a factor in the outcome of the World Series. Sure, they never make it themselves; but at least they help determine who will sit in the dugout and weep.

Of course, that's kind of like being proud of sneezing in someone's face and giving them your cold.

Cafeteria martyr can't save own skin

by Kathy Steele

"She just disappeared," said one of the girls on the second floor of Batchelder Hall, after it was discovered that University freshman Katherine Steele was beginning to grow increasingly thinner.

Apparently, according to her mother and father, she used to be a sizable eater. "Oh yes," Mr. Steele recollected, while trying to hold back the tears. "Sometimes she consumed food faster than we could provide it. In fact she was very keen on salami. Yes, very keen indeed."

As the story goes, every day at exactly 7 a.m., 11 a.m., and 4 p.m., Miss Steele would make a daily sojourn to the Kreischer cafeteria and proceed to shove as many of the University's succulent eatables onto her tiny tray as possible. After this daily ritual, she would make her way back to her room, leaving a slug-like trail of jello, where she would stare as if in a trance at the delectables in front of her. "Once we found her weeping in her mashed potatoes and freckle special. We didn't know what to do or what to say," commented several hall residents who wished to remain anonymous.

Things began to grow steadily worse as Miss Steele's behavior undertook more violent overtones. In the Batchelder cafeteria one afternoon she stood atop the milk machine, creating a permanent drip, and shrieked, "No more freckle specials! Oh, God, no more freckle specials!"

At other times, not only would she laugh with evil hysteria in the food line, but the obviously troubled girl had taken to physically attacking the help by smearing Crisco in their faces and then whispering in their ears, "I suggest Oxy

Even her roommate, who will be known as Miss X, was seeing the signs of her gradual unclinging. Miss X noticed Miss Steele's sleep becoming more and more troubled with each passing night. "It became a living Hell," she said.

Miss Steele finally, by all appearances, ceased to eat completely. Concerned friends, in desperate attempts to save the starving girl, tried to force feed her. Even the ever-helpful food services donated hundreds of freckle specials to Miss Steele, who was at this point crying tears of joy in obvious response to the generous act.

Unfortunately, even with every effort made, all of their help came to no avail. Katherine Steele disappeared at 6 a.m. on Wednesday, Sept. 24, 1986.

In reaction to this tragic occurrence within Bowling Green, the University has produced a multi-media presentation for all incoming freshmen called You eat therefore you are, so stay that way. It is a valiant attempt to persuade future dorm residents to keep up with their daily diets of french fries, tacos, chili, mozzarella-smearred hot dogs, BLT's and chocolate cakes - foods that will keep a young mind fresh and alert in between applications of Stridex acne pads.

Yes, Miss Steele may not have evaporated in vain. She could still pose as a very influential example.

As a side note: freckle specials have since been found to pose a threat to the dermis layer of skin in adolescents.

Steele is a freshman radio-television-film major from Cincinnati.

Misinformation in incomplete story

Thank you for the nice story on the upcoming conference on "Economic Rights and the Constitution," scheduled for October 23-25.

However, the story is in error when it describes the Social Philosophy and Policy Center as "independent of the University." As a research center, we are a regular academic unit of Bowling Green State University, reporting to the Associate Vice President for Research and the Dean of the Graduate College.

In addition, the story failed to mention that this project was conceived and is being principally directed by Dr. Ellen Frankel Paul, Deputy Director of the Center who was also the principal author of the National Endowment for the Humanities grant that is funding it.

Quality literature sought by readers

As a dedicated student carrying 16 hours of classes, I consider it a privilege to have enough time in my daily routine to actually sit down to read a newspaper. With this in mind, I find it quite upsetting to open The BG News and be confronted with articles written by Scott Munn.

Has the man ever taken a college writing course? I ask because I do not see any obvious form in his writing. Often he is unclear and/or contradictory in his approach. In addition, if Mr. Munn is attempting to combine satirical humor with relevance to familiar situations, I fail to see his success.

Remember Bush's past statements

In the aftermath of all the glitter and hoopla surrounding George Bush's visit to Bowling Green, it's important to keep in mind that this is the same man who, on a visit to the Philippines, toasted Ferdinand Marcos' "commitment to democracy," and who, during the 1980 campaign, told a reporter that he believed it was possible to "win" a nuclear war.

However one feels about the Vice President's alleged connections to gun runners operating in Central America, Mr. Bush's expressed opinions are testimony to his recklessness.

Students get healthy tips

by Dan Geiger
reporter

Sometimes a student's life can involve too little sleep, a lack of proper eating habits and anxiety brought on by academic pressures. This type of lifestyle often makes it difficult to stay fit and healthy.

Counteracting this lifestyle is the aim of The Student Wellness Center, nicknamed The Well.

The Well, located on the second floor of the Health Center, offers informative handouts along with private sessions with peer counselors to help students improve their overall health, according to Annmarie Allen, coordinator of The Well.

Allen said the concept of wellness involves becoming healthy in all dimensions of life. She said these dimensions include improving physical, emotional, social, occupational, intellectual and spiritual health.

"One way we can help students become healthier physically is with our nutrition counseling program," Allen said.

The nutrition counselors are under the supervision of home economics professor Sooja Kim.

Kim, a practicing dietician and supervisor of the nutrition counseling program, said weight loss is what the students want most to talk about with counselors.

"MANY STUDENTS have misconceptions about dieting," Kim said. "They are tempted by fad diets which promise quick weight loss but may not be nutritionally sound."

Kim said students are also taken in by advertisements selling diet pills that are supposed to take off weight effortlessly.

"These advertisements are very misleading," she said.

"The weight that is lost from taking these pills is all water loss, so most of it will be gained back as soon as you drink a glass of water."

Kim said that in order for people to lose weight they must first be willing. Then they have to change their eating habits and also increase their physical activities.

"To lose weight and get proper nutrition at the same time, a person must learn the caloric and nutrient value of different foods," she said.

The nutrition counselors also offer advice on vitamins, eating on a budget and information on eating disorders such as bulimia or anorexia.

Allen said students may not understand that there are other dimensions involved in wellness than just physical health.

"CHALLENGING yourself academically or having an openness to learn is what is meant by intellectual health," she said. "There also may be some confusion regarding what is meant by spiritual health. It means finding a purpose in life, so whether or not this involves religion is entirely up to the individual."

Allen said that occupational health means being content with your job, while social health is being comfortable in your environment as a whole.

Some of the other areas The Well helps students with are: quitting smoking, dealing with peer pressure, coping with stress, managing time and thinking positively.

"If students need more direction than we can provide, we refer them to a department on campus or to an outside agency where someone can advise them further," Allen said.

Pi Kapps P.U.S.H. for kids

by John Meola
staff reporter

P.U.S.H. Week, the national philanthropic event put on by the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, began this week.

The fraternity is trying to raise enough money to buy indoor playgrounds for mentally retarded children. The units, called play units for the severely handicapped, or P.U.S.H., cost $17,000 each.

P.U.S.H. Week is run by every chapter of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity throughout the nation. The proceeds from the events are combined to buy two or three units for institutions throughout the country.

P.U.S.H. Weeks have been an annual event here at the University since 1981.

Events for the University P.U.S.H. Week include a wheelchair "push-a-thon" in the Union Oval, a happy hour at Rocky Rococco's pizza parlor, a "Male Review" at the Uptown bar, a toga party at the Lenhart Grand Ballroom and a "Toll Road" at the corner of Poe and Main streets.

Tony Kalich, president of Pi Kappa Phi, said that the wheelchair "push-a-thon" is the most visible aspect of the event.

"We are trying to make the campus aware of P.U.S.H. Week," said Kalich. "We rely on all of the students and not just the greek students for support."

At "Toll Road," Pi Kappa Phi members will solicit donations from motorists waiting at the intersection.

THE P.U.S.H. units operate on action-reaction basis, said Laura Fleeger, a certified therapeutic recreation specialist at the Sunshine Children's Home in Toledo.

"The children push a button and they will see a slide projection. If they push the button again they will see a new slide," said Fleeger.

Because the children sometimes lack the ability to walk, a vibrator is included in the unit. A waterbed is also included in the unit.

The P.U.S.H. unit was developed by an architect who originally started building outdoor facilities, Fleeger said. Originally, P.U.S.H. units were only in state mental retardation facilities. The Sunshine Home is one of the first private institutions to get a P.U.S.H. unit, said Fleeger.

The Pi Kappa Phis raised about $3,700 during last year's P.U.S.H. week. This year the fraternity hopes to tie last year's figure or exceed it. "This year we would like to match or beat last year's figure," he said.

Currently, Kalich said the fraternity is making about the same amount as they were last year, although Kalich also said that University students are more aware of the event than last year.

"We'll hopefully get a lot of support from the campus," Kalich said. "This is not a greek event but an event that involves the whole campus."

An accident early yesterday north of Bowling Green between a pickup truck and a parked tractor-trailer rig sent a Waterville man to the hospital.

Troopers at the Walbridge post of the Ohio Highway Patrol said Jim Swayne, 32, of Waterville, was driving his Plymouth Scamp light pickup truck southbound on Interstate 75 south of the Sugar Ridge Road overpass at about 2:40 a.m. yesterday. He went off the right side of the road and struck the semi, parked on the berm of the southbound lane.

Swayne was taken by the Fire fighters said the cab of Swayne's pickup was heavily damaged and the windshield broken out. He was not wearing a seat belt, troopers said.

The semi was unattended and the driver's name was unavailable. Troopers said the semi driver would be cited for improper parking.

Student picks U.S. education

by Jared O. Wadley
copy editor

Many students have the opportunity of enrolling in a college in their home state. One international student had an opportunity to attend college, but not in her country.

Desiree Emerencia, senior international business major from Aruba, had to choose between attending college in Holland or in the United States.

Aruba, controlled by Holland, is located in the Caribbean 12 miles from the coast of Venezuela, and has a population of 60,000 to 70,000, Emerencia said.

She said the island's government gives scholarships to those interested in attending college because there are no colleges on the 75-square-mile island.

Those who want to attend college must go to school in Holland or in the United States, she said.

She said she applied to several schools in the United States including Ohio State University, but she chose Bowling Green because of its "small size."

"I chose BG because it is a college town," Emerencia said. "Most people I see are my own age."

Another reason why she chose Bowling Green is because of the changing weather. She said Aruba is tropical year-round, so she wanted to live in a city which isn't always warm.

WHEN SHE came to the University in August 1982, there were 21 students from Aruba at the University. Since Aruba's economy is in a decline, the island's government has restricted students from attending schools in the United States.

"There are only six (Aruban) students (at the University). It is less expensive to go school in Holland," she said. "I like being independent because I didn't have that much responsibility at home."

She said most of her friends attend school in the United States. However, she said she has new friends, both American and international.

"I was very surprised and happy to meet people from different countries. I don't think I'll ever have another opportunity to associate with people from different cultural backgrounds," she said.

Not only does she have American friends, but she also has an "American family."

She said the University's International Programs united Emerencia with an American family in Bowling Green.

David and Esther Krabill, 510 Brownwood Ct., who have 'adopted' Asian students through International Programs, are Emerencia's American parents.

"WE ENJOY getting to know students from different countries and learning about their culture," Mrs. Krabill said.

Mrs. Krabill also said she and her husband enjoy learning Papiamentu from Emerencia. She said Papiamentu, a language of Portuguese origin, is comprised of English, Dutch, Spanish and African words.

Although she doesn't live with the Krabills, Emerencia does eat at the Krabill house and talks to them regularly. She also goes shopping in Toledo with Mrs. Krabill.

Emerencia said the Krabills are very active in community service. She said this surprised her because her parents are passive.

Emerencia said she will stay in Bowling Green if she can afford graduate school. Otherwise, she said she plans to return to Aruba or go to school in Holland.

This is her second visit to the United States. On her first visit, Emerencia visited Miami, New York City and Washington, D.C.

Bankers plead innocence in fraud

CINCINNATI (AP) - Former Home State Savings Bank owner Marvin Warner and President Burton Bongard pleaded innocent yesterday to federal charges of conspiracy and fraud in connection with the collapse of the thrift last year.

Warner, 67, and Bongard, 46, were arraigned before visiting U.S. District Judge Charles Joiner of Michigan, who set bond and a tentative Dec. 15 trial date on the federal charges.

Warner and Bongard also are confronted with a Nov. 17 trial in state court on charges related to the collapse of a Florida securities dealer and the subsequent failure of Home State, which touched off Ohio's thrift crisis.

A Hamilton County Common

Pleas judge will decide today whether to keep the Nov. 17 trial date and whether to move the trial because of publicity, as requested by defense attorneys.

If the state trial goes ahead, the federal trial will be delayed until May 4, Joiner said. Defense attorneys said they will also ask that the federal trial be moved from Cincinnati.

The main contention during the arraignment hearing yesterday afternoon was the amount of bond to be set for Warner, whose attorneys asked that he be allowed to remain free on his own recognizance.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ann Marie Tracey asked for a $5 million bond to prevent Warner from fleeing the United States.

Joiner called that amount exorbitant, and instead accepted a $1 million bond backed up by the deed to Warner's Clermont County farm, valued at $4.8 million.

WARNER AND Bongard were flanked by five attorneys who argued on their behalf. They entered their innocent pleas themselves and gave short answers to questions that Joiner was required to ask.

Afterwards, Warner told reporters he welcomed the chance to prove his innocence in court.

The 31-count federal indictments against the two men, returned Oct. 2, allege that they directed Home State to invest large sums with ESM Government Securities of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., even though they knew ESM suffered heavy losses and required money from Home State to continue to operate.

The indictment said the pair also knew the investments "gravely jeopardized" Home State.

Bongard agreed to put up a Long Island, N.Y., home owned by his wife and valued at $150,000 as bond. Ms. Tracey said the home was sufficient bond because Bongard has minimal financial holdings.

SHE ASKED for the $5 million bond for Warner, saying his net worth was over $79 million. She said Warner might be tempted to flee the country, due to penalties he faces if convicted.

Debates deter oil price hike

GENEVA (AP) - OPEC leaders, weary on the 16th day of talks, debated a new compromise on oil production controls yesterday that could clear the final obstacle to a full agreement aimed at preventing another price drop.

After 24 hours of nearly continuous backroom bargaining, including contacts between some OPEC heads of state, the ministers produced a series of proposals that sources said had broken a key logjam.

No final agreement was announced, and no formal ministerial meeting was scheduled at which an official deal could be signed.

The 13 ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were trying to agree on conditions under which they would extend an existing accord on production controls until Dec. 31. The current accord expires Oct. 31.

Analysts said an extension of the accord through year's end would at least keep oil prices from falling, although few expected price increases.

The key dispute centered on Kuwait's demand for a 10 percent increase in its production quota, starting Nov. 1. Several members argued that Kuwait was one of the wealthiest OPEC nations and that any production increases should be given to needier members.

THE MINISTERS had given up earlier in the conference on a proposed renegotiation of quotas for all members. They delayed that until their next conference, scheduled to begin in December.

Conference sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said Kuwait was ready to accept one of several compromise proposals that would boost its production quota by slightly more than 10 percent. But it remained unclear whether the other members would go along.

The compromise proposals called for increasing OPEC's overall production ceiling, for November and December only, by between 200,000 barrels a day and 209,000 barrels a day from the current level of approximately 16.8 million barrels a day, the sources said.

Kuwait would get the biggest increase, followed by Ecuador and Gabon. All other members except Iraq would get smaller increases in their quotas, the sources said.

IRAQ WAS excluded because it is not party to the current accord on production limits and, under the proposed extension, would continue to be free to produce as much as it wished.

California chief justice losing in polls

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A bumper sticker spotted in California sheds some light on Rose Bird's problem with the public. "Free the Night Stalker. Elect Rose Bird," it says.

In fact, Richard Ramirez has not yet gone to trial in the Los Angeles "night stalker" killings, much less been convicted or sentenced to death. And none of the convicted murderers whose death sentences Rose Bird has voted to overturn - joined, in all but three cases, by a majority of the state Supreme Court - has gone free, or is likely to go free anytime soon.

No matter. The chief justice of California has become a symbol to opponents - of soft, criminal-coddling judges, of legal "technicalities" that set criminals free and of liberalism in a conservative era.

Her inability to shed that symbolism is what has made it virtually impossible for Bird to dent her overwhelming deficit in opinion polls for the Nov. 4 election, two days after her 50th birthday, no matter how she replies to opponents' charges on the death penalty, lack of prior judicial experience and political bias.

The first woman in the Santa Clara County Public Defender's office, the first woman in a California governor's Cabinet and the first and only woman ever appointed to the state Supreme Court appears likely to become the first justice of either gender removed by the voters in the 50 years of nonpartisan retention elections. A Los Angeles Times poll published yesterday said 60 percent of the 1,594 registered voters surveyed would vote no on Bird's reconfirmation, 31 percent would vote yes and 9 percent were undecided.

PROBABLY EVEN a skillful, professionally run campaign could not have saved Bird's job. But that will remain a mystery.

The chief justice has hired and fired several political consultants, and now is conducting her own $1 million campaign. She even writes her own 30-second television commercials, which amount to brief lectures on the court's role.

"I shouldn't go to some political manipulator, some political consultant to have them go to a pollster and find out what emotional button to push and then trick them into voting for me," she says.

The statement is vintage Bird: uncompromising, apparently unconcerned with the consequences.

Reagan sure of arms treaty

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, expressing confidence the United States and the Soviet Union will reach an arms agreement, pledged yesterday during a visit by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl that the accord will be based on allied strength and not "weakness or timidity."

Reagan greeted Kohl at an elaborate welcoming ceremony on the White House South Lawn, and both said that Reagan's meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Iceland provided the basis for further nuclear arms reduction talks.

"There is . . . ample reason for optimism," said Reagan, in another upbeat assessment of the Iceland talks that failed to yield any breakthrough toward an arms agreement.

Reagan said any future agreement with the Soviets would be based not on trust alone, but on the strength shown by the United States and its allies.

"When the next agreement is finally reached with the Soviet Union — and I say when, not if — it will not be the result of weakness or timidity on the part of Western nations," Reagan promised. "It will flow from our strength, realism and unity."

KOHL HAS said he would oppose any agreement that would leave Europe vulnerable to the overwhelmingly superior conventional forces of the Soviet bloc. He stressed yesterday that the Allies' security concerns must be taken into account even as the superpowers attempt a weapons cutback.

While Gorbachev seemed interested in improved East-West ties, Kohl said, only continued negotiations will produce results.

Reagan contended that his proposed space-based missile defense system, better known as "Star Wars," made an arms agreement more likely. He reaffirmed his pledge to share "in the benefits of strategic defense" with the Soviets.

Reagan called his talks with Gorbachev "a giant step forward" compared to past arms negotiations, which he said produced only a cap on offensive weapons while allowing production of more missiles and warheads.

Reagan and Kohl, who have met seven times since the chancellor was elected more than four years ago, chatted amiably and shared a laugh or two as the U.S. Colonial Color Guard passed in review in bright sunshine.

While Kohl's four-day visit had been planned for months, Kohl recently expressed a particular interest in hearing Reagan's account of the Iceland discussions on reducing intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

THE SUPERPOWERS had tentatively agreed to do away with NATO's medium-range missiles and the SS-20s that the Soviets have aimed at western Europe, but the talks foundered on Gorbachev's insistence that the cuts be linked to curbs on Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative or Star Wars plan.

West Germany has born the brunt of NATO's 1979 decision to deploy medium-range missiles. The Bonn government has withstood criticism from anti-nuclear organizations.

Accountants accused of 'scam'

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Attorneys for the bankrupt ESM Government Securities Inc. yesterday accused the company's former accounting firm of aiding "the largest securities scam in the history of the United States."

The charge came before six jurors in opening arguments of ESM's $85 million damage suit against Grant Thornton of Chicago, formerly known as Alexander Grant. ESM's trustees hold the auditor responsible for covering up the fraud.

But Grant's attorney Alvin Stein said his company's auditor, Jose Gomez, was acting on his own when he hid $315 million in ESM's losses.

ESM attorney Jose Garcia-Pedrosa began the arguments, saying the former officers of ESM were "not interested in profit, they were only interested in generating cash so they could steal it."

He said because Grant continued putting out statements that ESM was profitable, customers continued to invest and lose money. He pointed to 11 filing cabinets lining a wall of the courtroom, and said they were his proof.

"Grant violated almost every rule in the book for nine years" said Garcia-Pedrosa.

"If these statements had not been issued, ESM Government would have been declared bankrupt and shut their doors long ago."

AT ISSUE is $85 million the officers looted after Grant began issuing the statements, the attorney said.

Grant's attorney, Stein, emphasized that he does not represent Gomez, who was convicted of accepting bribes from ESM officers to hide the losses. But he contended that ESM got the audits they wanted.

"That's what they bargained for and that's what they got," said Stein, calling ESM's former officers a "gang of thieves."

He said there was no breach of contract because Grant's deal was with ESM, not its customers or the financial community, and ESM got the statements it requested.

ESM's current court-appointed trustee, Thomas Tew, who was given the task of representing the firm's investors after it was declared bankrupt, was the first witness.

He said during cross-examination by Grant's attorneys that 95 percent of the settlement he was seeking for ESM would go to the state of Ohio and a private insurance fund. They had bailed out customers of Home State Savings Bank of Cincinnati, which collapsed after losing $144 million to ESM.

THE COLLAPSE of Home State prompted a run on other privately insured Ohio thrifts, and Gov. Richard Celeste temporarily closed all of them until they obtained federal deposit insurance.

Grant has already settled with all major creditors except ESM and Home State. The auditing firm so far has paid out $72.5 million — $50 million to municipalities and $22.5 million to Miami-based American Savings and Loan Association.

In April, seven men involved with ESM pleaded guilty in federal court here to participating in the ESM fraud. Those pleading included Gomez, ESM board chairman Ronnie Ewton and co-founder George Mead.

Their sentencing has been postponed until Jan. 26, and they may be called to Ohio to testify in next month's trial of Marvin Warner, who faces 50 criminal counts there related to the Home State-ESM case.

Last week, former ESM President Nicholas Wallace was sentenced here to 30 years in prison for his role in the fraud. Stanley Wolfe, who directed movements of ESM securities, was acquitted in the same trial.

U.S. businesses leave S. Africa

IBM, GM influenced by low economy, anti-apartheid activists

WASHINGTON (AP) — American companies, squeezed by a lagging economy in South Africa and anti-apartheid activists at home, are leaving the white-ruled country at a brisk pace, analysts say.

International Business Machines Corp. and General Motors Corp., two industrial giants, are the most recent companies to announce plans to sell operations in South Africa.

Their decisions increase to 29 the number of American companies that have left or voiced plans to do so in 1986, according to Investor Responsibility Research Center, a Washington-based group that tracks U.S. business activity in South Africa.

The Coca-Cola Co., Procter & Gamble Co. and the Marriott Corp., are among the others who are pulling out stakes.

Thirty-nine American companies left in 1985, compared with seven in 1984. U.S. firms in South Africa number 244, with investment totaling $1.3 billion, down from $2.6 billion in 1981.

Disinvestment has long been a goal of American opponents of South Africa's apartheid system of strict racial separation. They argue that withdrawing U.S. capital sends a strong message to Pretoria's white government.

"This remains a major victory for the anti-apartheid movement," said Randall Robinson of the lobbying group TransAfrica. "We are going to see . . . increasing isolation of that country."

The announcements by GM and IBM were especially significant because those corporations are big, well-known entities with global identities, Robinson said, predicting that more American firms will pull out shortly.

Disinvestment, however, is not a requirement of the sanctions legislation passed by Congress earlier this month. The law, which was enacted over President Reagan's veto, prohibits any new U.S. investment in South Africa, among other things.

The Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black Philadelphia minister who has dealt with American firms in South Africa, has called for withdrawal of U.S. investment and a blockade of the country if apartheid is not abolished by May 1987.

For years, Sullivan urged U.S. companies to stay in South Africa as an engine for change, but he set the 1987 deadline as a means of stepping up pressure on Pretoria.

Sullivan, who hailed GM's decision, devised the so-called Sullivan Principles, a code of conduct that many American businesses follow in hiring, training and promoting black workers in South Africa.

South Africa's recession-plagued economy has played a big role in the exodus of U.S. firms.

GM Chairman Roger Smith said the automaker decided to sell its wholly owned subsidiary employing about 3,000 people in part because it had been losing money for several years.

But Marcy Murningham, president of the social investment division of Mitchell Investment Management in Cambridge, Mass., said the disinvestment moves reflect a growing consensus on how to deal with South Africa.

The disinvesting companies are saying "the status quo is not acceptable," she said.
